Top IT Analyst Firm Places Capgemini Second in Worldwide Revenue among Global Utility Industry Service Providers

Paris, New York, (February 28, 2007) – Capgemini, one of the world's foremost providers of consulting, technology and outsourcing services, today announced that Gartner has reported that Capgemini was the world's second highest revenue producer in 2006 among companies in the global utilities industry, according to Gartner, Inc.'s: "Worldwide Utilities Industry Primer, 2006."<sup>1</sup>

"Capgemini takes great pride in being the world's second largest producer of revenues among the companies that provide consulting, IT and outsourcing services to the global utility industry. We have worked hard in 2006 to provide innovative solutions based on our intimate knowledge of both our clients' business and the industry," said Colette Lewiner, Senior Vice President and Head of Global Energy, Utilities & Chemicals for Capgemini. "Our clients have performed well in key measures of utility company performance, confirming that Capgemini's strategic solutions and unique collaborative business approach allow them to achieve better business results faster."

From transforming business operations to helping utility clients successfully navigate through complex and evolving industry issues— such as new technology, deregulation and consolidation— Capgemini delivered a wide range of business benefits to utilities worldwide in 2006, Lewiner said.

"As we move forward in 2007, Capgemini will continue to invest in industry thought leadership and delivering even greater value to our utilities clients worldwide," she said.
