– NEWS ALERT –

Capgemini receives HP AllianceOne Mission-Critical Computing Partner of the Year Award

Paris, June 13 2013 – Capgemini, one of the world’s foremost providers of consulting, technology and outsourcing services, today announced it has been awarded the HP AllianceOne Partner of the Year Mission-Critical Computing Award. This is a significant achievement and recognition of outstanding solutions built on HP Converged Infrastructure technologies in the category of Mission-Critical Computing. The award was presented at the HP Discover event in Las Vegas.

This award specifically recognizes how Capgemini has leveraged HP’s technology to drive innovation in its solution delivery in the Utilities industry. Capgemini has worked with HP to design the HP IT Infrastructure and software required to support its Smart Metering program and applications. The Smart Metering solution has positively impacted customers’ business models by reducing operating costs of meter management and client outage response as well as by providing detailed information for day-to-day energy demand.

Karthik Ranganathan, Capgemini HP Global Partner Executive said: “We are delighted to receive this award which recognizes our joint efforts and successful implementation of innovative solutions. Together with HP we help our clients transform their business and IT landscapes while capitalizing on new and disruptive technology trends in today’s competitive market environment.”

HP AllianceOne Partner of the Year Awards recognize HP business partners' accomplishments in the development and delivery of innovative HP-based solutions that raise the standard for business excellence and client satisfaction. Winners are chosen for delivering solutions that drive meaningful business results for shared customers.
