

Incident-response service for challenging times

Capgemini provides remote support on-demand for cybersecurity analysis

Maintaining cyber defenses is critical. As market disruptions add challenges for companies, they also create more potential avenues for malicious activity. For CISOs, the priority is to monitor and protect IT infrastructure and services.

With more employees working from home, there are new considerations for securing the environment, from supporting the associated infrastructure changes to monitoring the new edge of the enterprise to the distributed employee base. The mission remains the same: defend the enterprise. Security needs to support business continuity and ensure operations can continue.

Incident-response services

Companies want collaboration and support for their security needs, and operational assistance and additional capacity in case of an attack.

Capgemini's incident-response service remotely diagnoses problems, reviews logs and data, and provides on-demand guidance and advice to customer cybersecurity personnel. The team performs remote cyber-forensics to research the breach and provide diagnostics and remediation, as well as make improvement recommendations.

Our on-demand cyber analysts research, identify, isolate, and remediate the damage with the internal team. It means you can recover more quickly with less damage.

Cybersecurity at Capgemini

Delivered as part of a managed direction-and-response service, Capgemini's incident-response service can also provide insights into how to prevent future breaches by re-calculating your risk profiles and reviewing policies and procedures.

We have the breadth and depth of skills to transform security from a source of worry, risk, and complexity into a source of strength, value, and competitive advantage. Our operational services can be delivered today.
